

Master Plan Goals Review

City Council Meeting
December 15, 2009

Preserve and protect the pleasant quality of life

Preservation of the quiet, family-oriented character of the residential neighborhoods.

SV continues to be a pleasant and relaxing place for people to live, work, shop and play.

Preservation of the community's natural resources, including the native wildlife habitat, natural site features and underground water supply.

Development within the City and ETJ potentially threatens the quality of water in the local aquifer and must be carefully monitored to avoid degradation to the community's water source.

Stewardship of the basic elements of wildlife habitat including ample space, fresh water, fresh air and habitat diversity that fosters varied plant life.

Protecting existing and future development from increased flooding potential and erosion of soils.

Celebrate its independent identity from the City of Austin and remain a primarily rural residential community visually separate from the forces and influences of Austin.

Compatible development that will retain the character and aesthetic value of the natural land form.

Provide cohesive management of the natural and built environment to accommodate the unique situations of various planning areas.

Healthy development can occur that maintains and enhances the City's unique character.

Provide a balanced transportation system that encourages non-vehicular traffic.

Pedestrian pathways and bicycle paths that link existing development with new and future development.

Contribute to a healthy and sage environment by minimizing noise intrusion.

Provide quality services and public facilities without burdensome fees or taxes.

Community Policing whereby patrol officers work with citizens to identify, diagnose and formulate policy to resolve problems that affect public safety.

Promote cooperation with surrounding communities and political jurisdiction, without compromising core goals and values.

Encourage viable and creative commercial development of a size and variety that reflects high standards of development quality and serves community needs.
